Show the best of your culture—starting this Heritage Weekend

I am looking at the daily rise of ugly racial comments on social media and the way people behave in general, especially in traffic and I think to myself—is this the new South African culture? Is this the product of our heritage, our education, the ideals we all strived for?

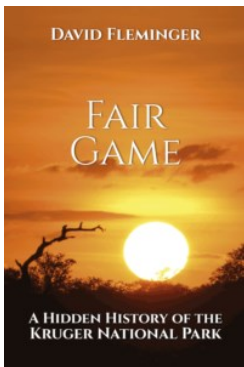

I would hope that it is a loud NO! I am really proud of my Afrikaans culture and the way I was raised. Afrikaans people are some of the most welcoming and polite people. I was raised to greet everybody I see and to always offer a visitor something to drink... and we braai anything, anytime!

I proudly show my culture by greeting literally everybody I see with a big smile (and in Afrikaans) and the response is amazing! Try it, I hardly ever encounter any racial comment, only a growing respect.

I challenge everybody to start showing the best of your culture instead of the worst modern South-Africanism can offer, like aggression, racism, selfishness, entitlement and arrogance... sorry, but it is the truth!

Where is the pride in our culture and our nation? Be proud of who you are and what you are and it can only command respect and social cohesion.

A great idea for your year end function

The KLCBT Annual Awards is always a wonderful way for companies to celebrate the end of the year. It is hassle free and guaranteed to be a lot of fun and inspiration to staff and clients alike. We see smaller companies buying a table to entertain all their staff and some large corporates buying a table to entertain their special clients or directors.

It is the most prestigious event of the year on the Lowveld calendar and this year will be no exception with a great three course formal dinner planned and the Toti Tenors from Swaziland making a return trip to entertain us due to popular demand.

Celebrate the success of the finalists and winners with a dance party and just a lot of fun. There are no night clubs in Nelspruit, so why not enjoy the opportunity when it comes around—on Friday the 13th October 2017?
