

Printing to self-defence promoted at networking session

Tumelo Waga Dibakwane

MBOMBELA - It was a night of fun and glamour, and an opportunity to meet like-minded individuals at the first highly successful networking session hosted by the Kruger Lowveld Chamber of Business and Tourism (KLCBT).

According to the KLCBT's public relations manager, Zelda Wright, the main aim of the event held in Woodenways on February 2 was to bring business people and potential clients together.

The attendees shared information about various products and services they offer. Some companies do printing, but they also do solar installations. Another, a security company, also offers self-defence classes.

"We believe that after the event, business people will have better ideas on how to expand their businesses," Wright said.

The night started with guests searching for a card with their birthday month on it. After they found it, they had to inform other members why they were attending the function. However, it was not all just business talk.

The guests were kept entertained by various other games such as running around while doing riddles, searching for paintings and even matching material on scatter cushions to relax their minds and to have fun.

Afterwards, tasty eats and drinks were supplied, providing the ideal backdrop for some successful networking for the rest of the evening.

Some of the guests who attended the KLCBT networking session.